„Here is the flower from Mount Kosciuszko—the highest peak of the continent, the first in the New World bearing a Polish name. I believe that you will be the first Polish woman to have a flower from that mountain. Let it remind you ever of freedom, patriotism, and love”

P. E. Strzelecki: “The particular configuration of this eminence struck me so forcibly, by the similarity it bears to the tumulus elevated in Krakow over the tomb of the patriot Kosciuszko, that, although in a foreign country, on foreign ground, but amongst a free people, who appreciate freedom and its votaries, I

Snowy Mountains, 12 March 1840 about 3 pm.

While standing on Mt Townsend, P.E. Strzelecki and J. Macarthur found that the actual summit was divided into six or more points. "The Count by the aid of his instruments quickly detected one of them as being in fact considerably higher than where we stood. A deep ravine, separating us from this, did not deter my adventurous friend; he determined to reach it. The Count he told me of his intention of recording his visit to the highest point in Australia by associating the name of Kosciuszko with our successful ascent. I could not but respect and feel deep sympathy with my friend, when with his hat off, he named the patriot of his country." (as described by James Macarthur in his Field Notes).

My mountain Kosciuszko
Is your mountain too,
It's a mountain for all Aussies, and visitors too.
So, whatever you do, and whatever you believe,
It's a mountain that reminds us that we're lucky to be free!
It's a mountain that unites us, and excites from within,
It's a place where no-one cares about the colour of your skin
(My Mountain Kosciuszko, lyrics by Ursula Lang, music by John Hospodaryk)
